A large pile of torn, aged, cream-colored paper scraps, likely postage stamps or envelopes, scattered on a dark blue background. The scraps feature various brown ink stamps, including circular postmarks with dates and locations (e.g., 'LEUWEN', 'KOCKENGEL', 'WILK CUL'), rectangular cancellation marks, and some text like 'AAN' and 'POSTWAANT'. The paper is heavily worn and discolored.

The image displays four envelopes, each containing a collection of postage stamps. The top-left envelope features a pink stamp with a portrait and a green stamp with a landscape. The top-right envelope contains a pink stamp with a portrait and a green stamp with a portrait. The bottom-left envelope is filled with several red stamps, some featuring portraits and others with decorative borders. The bottom-right envelope contains a variety of stamps, including a purple stamp with a portrait, a green stamp with a portrait, and a brown stamp with a portrait. The stamps are arranged in a somewhat haphazard manner, with some overlapping others. The envelopes are made of a light-colored, textured material, possibly paper or cardstock. The background is a dark, textured surface.
