THE GUERNSEY LILY
FOLKLORE
THE Guernsey Lily
According to legend, a handsome fairy came to Guernsey and on meeting beautiful Michelle de Garis, they fell deeply in love. Before taking Michelle back to fairyland as his wife, he gave her a built and asked her to plant it in the sand as a token to her family of their absent daughter. In due course Michelle's mother found a beautiful flower growing on the Vazon dunes. A strange bloom, it lacked perfume and a soul and, decked with gold, it was a fitting emblem for a fairy. Ever since then, the flower, Amaryllis sarniensis, has been cultivated in Guernsey and, so the story goes, it will not flourish elsewhere, not even in the other Channel Islands.
Today the Guernsey Lily is the island's national flower and the emblem of the local National Trust. Its origin, despite the legend, remains a mystery but its beauty is beyond dispute.

A legend of La Hougue Bie tells of the fearless Knight of Hambye who, accompanied by his servant came to Jersey to slay a terrible dragon. Having killed the monster, he slept, but his servant, filled with envy and wishing to claim the glory for himself, murdered his master. The servant returned to Normandy, taking the dead Knight's estates and his wife, but later revealed his treachery in a dream and as a result was hanged.

The Easter Voyage of St. Brelade relates to the Saint's identification, by the Abbé Manet, with St. Breladre of Brittany and St. Brendan of Ireland and the legend of how, searching in a tiny leather boat for the Blessed Isles and wishing to celebrate Easter, he and his monks landed on an island which miraculously appeared. Completing the day's worship, they re-embarked, whereupon the 'island', after all a great fish, swam beneath the waves.
